

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

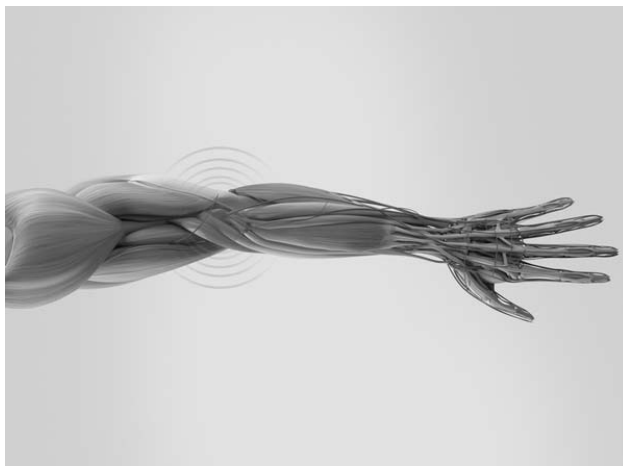

CONTENT

- Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Dr. Crayton can read his players' body language. How does he do it?

Learning Outcome

Understand actions, events, and experiences in present, past or future and in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about health and wellness.
- I can talk about what I've done or what I did.
- I can talk about the reason for an action or an event.

Ask your partner:

- Can you tell when someone is upset or annoyed, even if they are trying to hide it? How?
- What are some ways in which our actions can communicate our emotions?

Let's Explore!

Sometimes actions speak louder than words.

* "Actions speak louder than words" is a common expression which means that what you do is often more important than what you say.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Sports physician Steve Crayton has spent a lifetime perfecting the art of reading body language. He works exclusively with professional basketball players, and he has grown used to identifying injuries based on slight changes in a player's mannerisms.

"Many professional athletes have become accustomed to hiding injuries, since they don't want their opponents to find out and exploit their weakness," says Dr. Crayton.

According to Dr. Crayton, players don't have to report injuries for him to become aware of them. "I can just watch the game," he says. "If a player is slouching or grabbing his shorts, then he's winded. And if the player walks gingerly to the bench after a rough play, it's because he has a lower-body injury. He'll try to walk naturally, but it's obvious to me that he has sprained an ankle. Last week I was watching one of the guys play a game in Toronto," he recalls. "I noticed him leaning slightly to the left of the foul line, because he was favoring his right ankle. Right away, I made my way down from my seat to the locker room, just in case his ankle needed to be bandaged."

"Another telltale sign is a lack of concentration," Dr. Crayton continues. "If a guy is looking out into the crowd and not following the play, I know he's received some kind of a head trauma. In those cases, I don't wait until halftime. I'll pull him right away, just in case it's a concussion."

"It's a tricky job, it requires a great amount of attention to detail," Dr. Crayton says, cracking a smile. "But I'm not complaining. After all, not many jobs allow you to sit courtside at a basketball game."

Let's Practice!

Dr. Crayton talks about how he identifies when a basketball player is injured.

Instructions: Complete the text by choosing from the options you are given. Practice saying the complete sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.
had spend	has grown used	sprained	have watched	noticed
has spent	grows used	has been spraining	have been watching	have noticed
spent	grew used	had sprain	watched	notice

Sports physician Steve Crayton 1. _____ a lifetime perfecting the art of reading body language. He works exclusively with professional basketball players, and he 2. _____ to identifying injuries based on slight changes in a player's mannerisms.

"For instance, if a player walks gingerly to the bench after a rough play, it's because he has a lower-body injury. He'll try to walk naturally, but it's obvious to me that he 3. _____ an ankle." "Last week I 4. _____ one of my guys play a game in Toronto," he recalls. "I 5. _____ him leaning slightly to the left at the foul line, because he was favoring his right ankle."

Let's Practice!

Dr. Crayton uses sport terms to talk about the basketball players.

Instructions: Proofread the sentences. Circle the incorrect words.

1. If a guy is looking out into the crowd and not following the play, I know he's received some kind of hide tremor.
2. Many professional athletes have become accustomed to hiding injuries, since they don't want their opponents to find out and exploit the to weak.
3. If a player is slouching or grabbing his shorts, then he's winder.
4. If a player walks ginger to the bench after a rough play, it's because he has a lower-body injury.
5. I noticed him leaning slightness to the left at the foul line, because he was favoring his right ankle.

Extension Activity

Write a list of ways to tell if someone is lying.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Go online and research criminal behavior, specifically lying.
- Write a list of ten ways to tell if someone is lying.
- Share your list with a partner.
- Interrogate your partner about what he or she did last weekend.
- Instruct your partner to lie at least one time out of five. Try to identify when he or she is lying.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I research the body language of lying.

☐ ☐

I write ten sentences about body language.

☐ ☐

I share my findings with a partner.

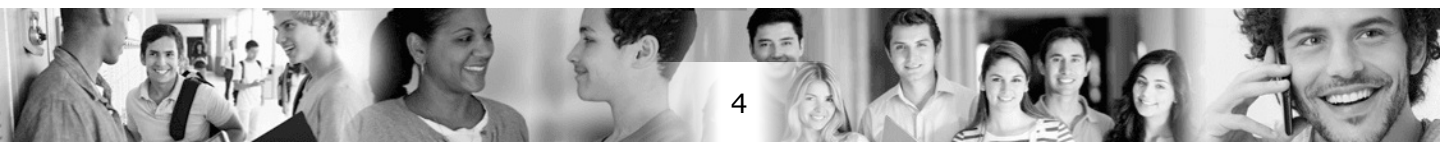

☐ ☐

I interrogate my partner.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- mannerism (noun): a habit or gesture that someone displays with the face, hands or body
e.g. He has grown used to identifying injuries based on slight changes in a player's mannerisms.
- to slouch (verb): to bend the neck, shoulders and head forward e.g. If a player is slouching or grabbing his shorts, then he's winded.
- winded (adjective): describing someone who is out of breath or tired e.g. The winded player was gasping on the bench.
- gingerly (adverb): slowly and carefully
e.g. And if a player walks gingerly to the bench after a rough play, it's because he has a lower-body injury.
- to favor (verb): to pay special attention to something e.g. I noticed him leaning slightly to the left at the foul line, because he was favoring his right ankle.
- head trauma (noun): an injury caused by a blow to the head
e.g. If a guy is looking out into the crowd and not following the play, I know he's received some kind of head trauma.

Learning Points

Present Perfect vs. Past Simple

You use the Present Perfect tense to talk about a past action or an action that began in the past that is connected to the present in some way.

Example:

Many professional athletes have become accustomed to hiding injuries.

= Athletes got injuries in the past and they still get them now. They are now used to hiding them - in the past, they were not.

You use the Present Perfect Simple to talk about habitual actions or states, that are connected to the present or have importance in the present.

Example:

I've been on the team for three years.

= I am still on the team now. We are talking about this now.

You use the Past Simple to talk an event in the past that is finished, which has no connection to the present.

Example:

I played basketball when I was a teen.

= The playing happened in the past. The action is finished. It no longer happens.

Examples:

- Many professional athletes have become accustomed to hiding injuries.
- Sports physician Steve Crayton has spent a lifetime perfecting the art of reading body language.
- Last week I was watching one of my guys play a game in Toronto.
- I noticed him leaning slightly to the left at the foul line.

Learning Points

The Reason Clause

You use reason clauses to express the reasons for an action, or why a situation is the way it is.

You use words like because, since, as, in case, and seeing that to introduce a reason clause.

Reason clauses are subordinate to the main clause. They state the reason why things are done, or what makes a situation the way it is.

You can use the following words to introduce a reason clause:

Connector	Use
because	You use because to explain the reason why something is the way it is.
since/as	You use since or as to introduce a reason that is already known.
(just) in case	You use in case to talk about things that may possibly happen.
seeing that	You use seeing that to state that a situation is known.

Read the following examples from the text:

Examples:

- I'll pull him right away, just in case it's a concussion.
- Right away, I made my way down from my seat to the locker room, just in case his ankle needed to be bandaged.
- And if a player walks gingerly to the bench after a rough play, it's because he has a lower-body injury.
- Many professional athletes have become accustomed to hiding injuries, since they don't want their opponents to find out and exploit the weakness.

